EXAMPLES OF DUE DILIGENCE EXPERTISE

CREDIT DECISIONS WHICH AVERTED MAJOR LOSSES (VARIOUS INDUSTRIES)

Gaming: A major investment bank syndicated a large bond issue to finance a casino in Atlantic City. I rejected the deal which subsequently went bankrupt within a year resulting in substantial losses to bond holders. Reasons for turndown: There was no equity in the project and the appraised valuation of the property was based on faulty and overly optimistic assumptions as to the growth of gaming in Atlantic City.

Major AAA Rated Insurance Company: The insurer went bankrupt within a year with significant losses to bond holders. In accordance with state insurance law, the policy holders had priority position over the lenders. Reasons for turndown: A review of the balance sheet indicated that practically all of the insurance company's investments were in high yield bonds. When the market for high yield bonds collapsed, the company had to write down its investments. The recovery in the workout resulted in significant losses to investors.

Major Investment Bank: We were part of a syndicated unsecured facility. The facility needed to be reappraised yearly. I became uncomfortable with the credit and despite fierce resistance from colleagues, I insisted we not renew the credit exposure. Within one year, the bank collapsed which would have resulted in major losses for us. Reason for turndown: My analysis was based on the deteriorating condition of the bank. Those who wanted to continue in the credit feared that the bank would exclude us from its syndicated loans and bonds.

Major Transportation Company: I insisted that we cut all exposure to this company which eventually went bankrupt. Reason for turndown: An analysis of the company showed a persistent negative trend over a period of years heading in the direction of bankruptcy and this is in fact is what happened. This company was not too big to fail.

LBO Deals: I turned down several LBO deals put together by a well-known group of investment bankers. Both deals ultimately collapsed leading to losses for Senior Secured Lenders. Reasons for turndowns: An analysis of the transactions showed that substantial repayment depended on a sale of assets as opposed to cash flow of the underlying companies. In several cases, the assets were shown not to be worth amounts sufficient to substantially pay off debt.

Major Photo Company: I turned down a leverage financing deal but was outvoted by the committee which accepted the credit. When it soon became obvious that my decision was correct, the bank was able to enter into a credit default swap which protected it from losses. Reason for turndown: It was apparent to me that with new technology (allowing, for example, photos to be taken by digital cameras and then by cell phones) that this company, lagging in embracing the new technology, would have difficulties.

Major Clothing Company: This was a high-profile LBO which was heralded as a strong credit. Unfortunately, the company went bankrupt within a year. Reason for turndown: The business made its reputation over the years by being conservative and growing in a slow, controlled manner. New leadership changed the business plan and, in my view, grew in a reckless fashion taking on too much debt.

SUMMARY: All of the above consisted of syndicated credits or bonds. My credit decisions were based on my experience including an ability to analyze business and financial risks. My credit decisions have never been based solely on credit ratings, the reputation of the sponsors of deals or on pressure from the sponsors to join the party.
